3/8 Monoova's record, as reported by the company:

– close to $200bn in payments processed since he joined
– transacts with more than 10% of all Australians
– FinTech Organisation of the Year at the 2022 Finnies

4/8 Monoova was a major player in PayTo, which lets a business take payments straight from a customer's bank account once the customer approves an agreement in their online banking.

In March 2024 it called itself Australia's largest PayTo facilitator.

6/8 What Redbelly said: he joins to lead its push into regulated tokenisation.

In his words: “In payments, I learnt that success belonged to the company that saw compliance as a product edge rather than a tick box.”

7/8 Why now: Australia's Digital Assets Framework Act commences in April 2027. And the RBA's Project Acacia report names Redbelly as one of three platforms used to test a pilot wholesale central bank digital currency.

8/8 Our read (analysis, not fact): Tokeniser may be run like payments infrastructure, sold via partners with compliance built in.

Open question: how payments experience carries over to capital markets.
